CEU Presentation: “Transparent Green: The Mainstreaming of EcoDesign”

Ecodesign has come a long way from its sixties granola roots. Where is it headed now and would the greenest goal be the end of green design?

David Bergman, principal of David Bergman Architect, is a licensed architect and LEED Accredited Professional, with 25 years of experience. His portfolio of projects include large scale urban developments, commercial interiors, home and apartment renovations, as well as design and production of custom furniture.

In addition to his architecture firm, Mr. Bergman currently teaches sustainable design at Parsons School of Design, has taught at Yale, and lectures frequently. Outside of the classroom, Mr. Bergman serves on the Board of several design organizations and has also found time to co-produce “Educating the Educators: A Crash Course on EcoDesign” as well as “Assignment: Green” an exhibition of the state of ecodesign education in six prominent NYC area design schools.
